WORKSHOP DISCUSSION:

The three-day training program on future preparation, conducted for college students, was structured to enhance their decision-making skills, priority management, and personal grooming.

On the first day, the focus was on decision making. The students were introduced to the importance and types of decisions, ranging from routine to strategic and individual to group decisions. Various decision-making models, including rational and intuitive models, were discussed, highlighting their pros and cons. Through case studies and group exercises, students analyzed real-life scenarios and presented their decisions, fostering a collaborative learning environment. An industry expert shared insights on decision-making under pressure, followed by a Q&A session, enriching the students' understanding.

The second day emphasized priority management, teaching students techniques to enhance productivity and achieve their goals. They learned about tools such as the Eisenhower Matrix, ABC Method, and time-blocking techniques. Interactive workshops allowed students to create their priority lists and apply these tools practically. Sessions on balancing short-term tasks with long-term goals and combating procrastination provided valuable insights. A personal reflection session helped students identify areas for improvement in their time management practices.

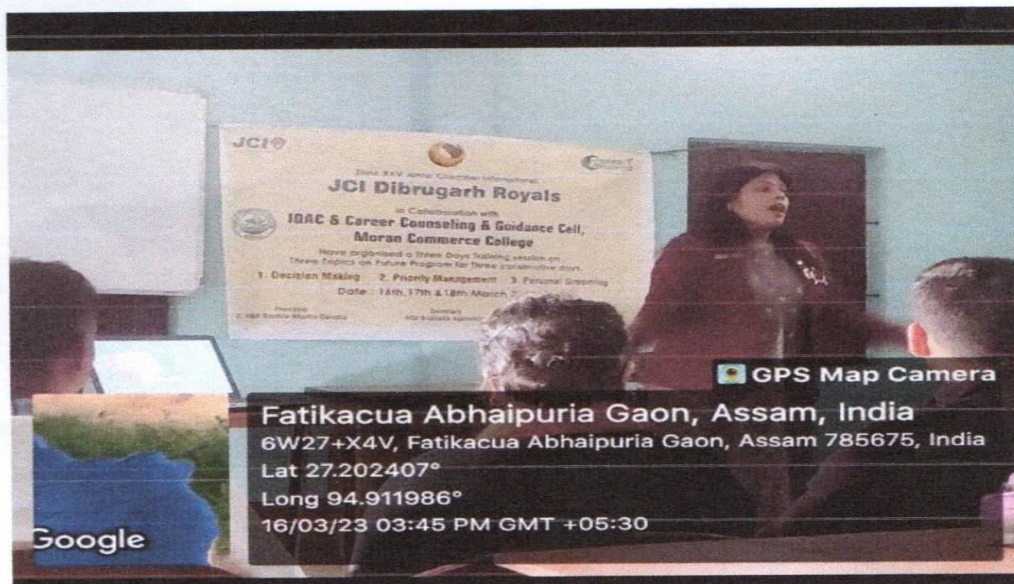

On the final day, personal grooming was addressed, underscoring its significance in professional life. Sessions covered the basics of personal hygiene, appropriate attire, and grooming routines for hair and skincare. Practical demonstrations and hands-on grooming sessions with professional stylists provided students with practical skills. Additionally, the role of non-verbal communication and effective body language was discussed. Personalized feedback sessions helped students refine their grooming practices, enhancing their self-confidence and professional image.

CONCLUSION:

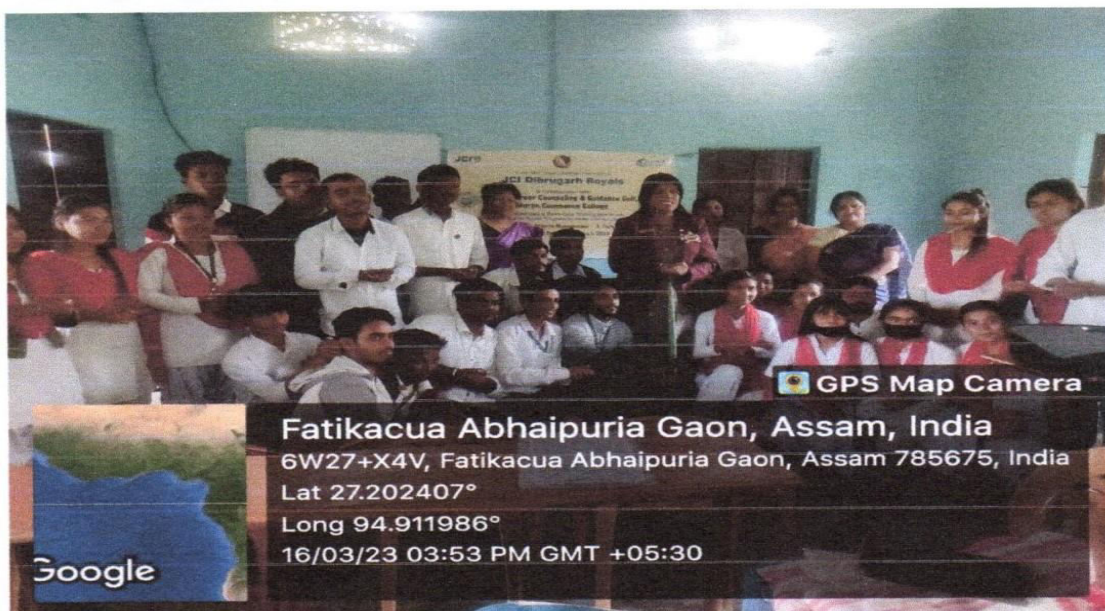

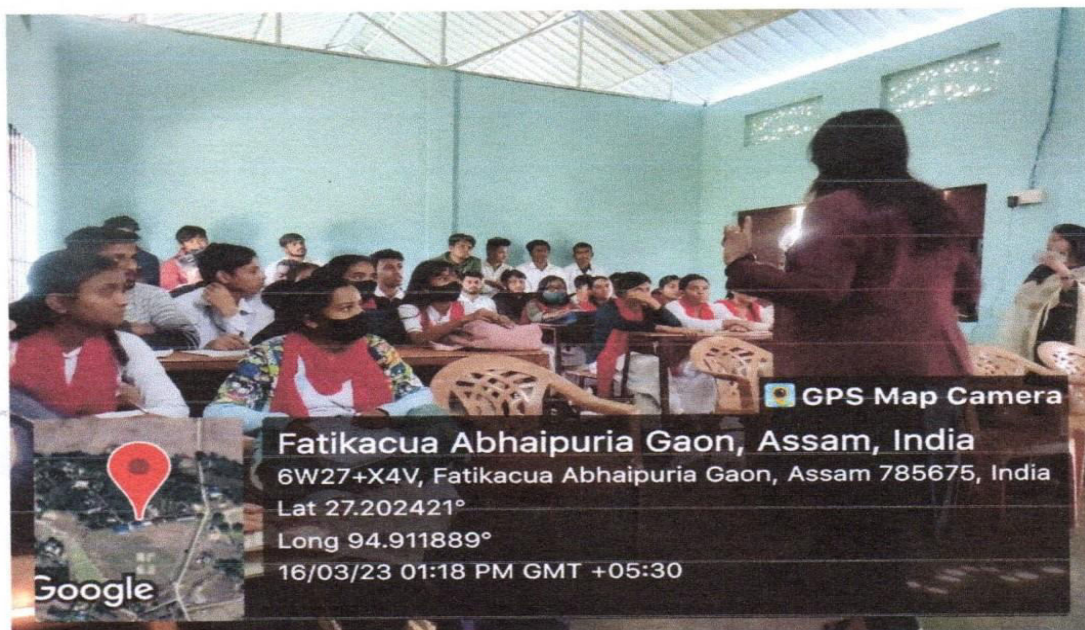

The three-day training program on future preparation, aimed at college students, was a resounding success. Over the course of the program, students gained invaluable skills in decision making, priority management, and personal grooming. The interactive sessions, hands-on activities, and expert insights provided a comprehensive learning experience, equipping students with practical tools to enhance their personal and professional lives. The positive feedback from participants underscores the effectiveness of the program and its significant impact on their growth and development.
